Data Source: RBI, as on 31st May 2023.

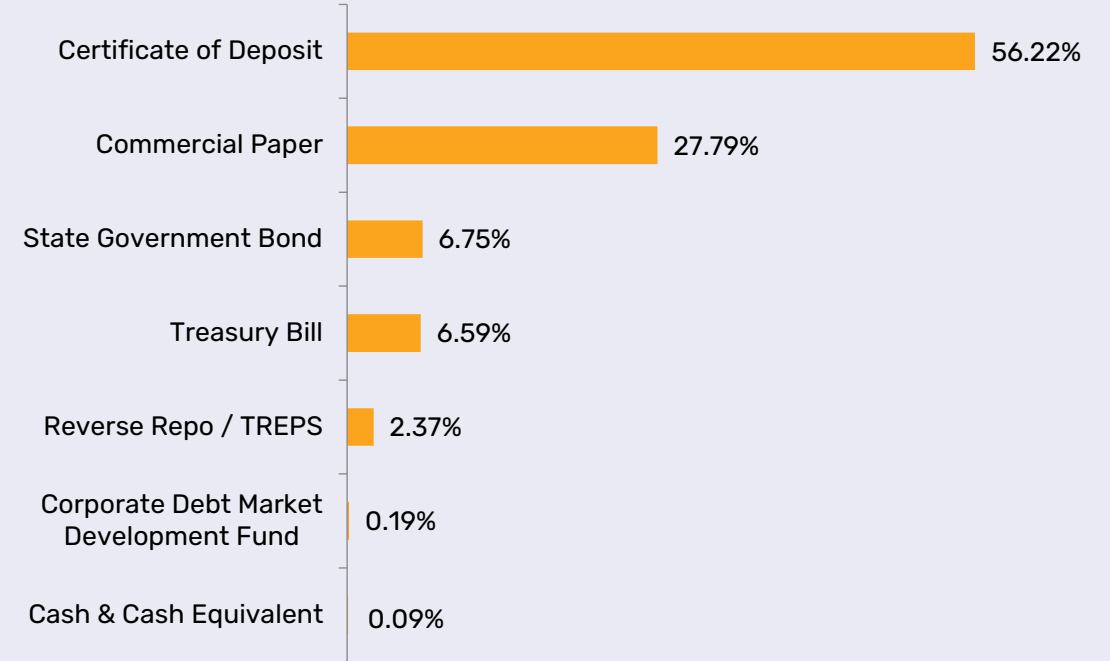

- Indian Bond market is increasingly range bound.
- The inflation is on downward trajectory due to improving supply conditions, low brent prices and onset of previous policy actions.
- The central banker seems to be on wait and watch mode on the course of future policy action in US, the monsoon data and macro demand supply interplay before it decides future course of action.
- Looking ahead, we anticipate that debt markets will remain stable, with a narrow range of movement until there is more clarity on both local and global economic growth.
- The shorter end of the yield curve is expected to remain well bid due to improving liquidity conditions.
